Henley, United Kingdom A Bomb disposal team was called to a residential house for reports of a muniton item in a garden shed on the property. The muniton, described as approximately 20 inches long and 6 inches in diameter, had reportedly been in the a shed for close to 30 years according to the owner of the house.

The residents were clearing out the shed when they discovered the shell. They took a picture of the ordnance and sent it to a friend who is in the Army. The friend recommended calling for help due the fact that the fuze appeared to be intact.

Police responded with a bomb squad to remove the shell identified as a WW I era projectile. After evacuating neighbors in the immediate area, the muniton was relocated for safe disposal off-site.
