Columbus, Texas The script of the upcoming comedic horror film "Something Evil" calls for fireballs, exploding light fixtures, a flaring bonfire, and smoldering earth. So who did the producers turn to support the development stage of the film? Answer, Bonnetti Explosives.

Explosives expert, Matt Barnett at Bonnetti Explosives came through with a bang when he orchestrated a series of controlled explosions and fireballs to create an impressive pyrotechnic display. According to Scot Allen Perry, the writer and director of Something Evil, "the tests went off without a hitch and have helped us to create an impressive presentation package. Without these tests we would be a 7 on the wow meter. Now we are a 10".

Filming for Something Evil is scheduled to begin in the Spring. Matt Barnett and Bonnetti explosives will be ready for the challenge.
