Dorset, United Kingdom A British dog owner was surprised when his dog who isn't normally a "digger," began frantically digging on Studland beach in Dorset. When he went to investigate, the owner was even more surprised to find that the digging had yielded what appeared to be a WWII shell. He immediately called authorities.

The fire brigade responded and confirmed that it was a military shell and they call the Army for EOD Support. EOD determined that the item was inert before removing it from the area.
