Zhengzhou, China a large cache of discarded unexploded munitions from the WWII era were found at a construction site in the capital of the Henan Province. A total of 1,320 unexploded grenades, bombs, and mortars were recovered in all. Authorities suspect that the weapons were buried by the Japanese Army during the 1940s. A underground gas pipeline was located less than 1 foot away from the cache so extreme care had to be taken during the removal process. Authorities plan to dispose of the unexploded discarded munitions at a safe place long the bank of the Yellow River.
